Q1: Seen passage -

5M

Once upon a time a fat Rat was caught in a shower of rain. He set to work and soon dug a nice hole in the ground, in which he sat as dry as a bone while the raindrops splashed outside, making little puddles on the road.

Now in the course of his digging, he came upon a fine bit of root, quite dry and fit for fuel, which he set aside carefully-for the Rat is an economical creature-in order to take it home with him. So, when the shower stopped, he set off with the dry root in his mouth. As he went along, he saw a poor man trying to light a fire, while a little circle of children stood by, and cried piteously. "Goodness gracious!" exclaimed the Rat, who was both soft-hearted and curious, "What a dreadful noise to make! What is the matter?"

"The children are hungry," answered the man, "they are crying for w their breakfast, but the sticks are damp, the fire won't burn, and so I can't bake the cakes."

"If that is all your trouble, perhaps I can help you," said the good-natured Rat. "You are welcome to this dry root, and I economical am sure it will soon make a fire."
